"Brand-New Explosion"3000 Attend "Sing-Out" of Moral Re-Armament

Some 100 collegians last night staged a rousing "Sing-Out" for an audience of 3000 at Constitution Hall.

The show, free, was sponsored by Moral Re-Armament.

"It's a brand new explosion, the right kind of revolution," Richard Wailes, Olympic gold medalist in rowing, told the audience. "With it, we will stop Russia and Red China dead in their tracks."

RELIGIOUS

The students, from 62 campuses and 17 foreign countries, who "sold their cars and closed bank accounts" to join the Sing-Out troupe, gave a program of songs about God, Paul Revere, Joan of Arc and a soldier in Viet Nam. About the only non-religious - or non-patriotic number was an aria from Verdi's opera, "Rigoletto."

The cast, according to Moral Re-Armament, is unsalaried and relies solely on contributions to sell its message of "laughter and hope for the world again" and shatter the "myth of a soft, self-indulgent and arrogant America." There were envelopes for contributions.

"I heard about this from church," said Stephanie Sparks, 17, of Bethesda. "It was fabulous!"

The bright-eyed, freshly scrubbed, ever-smiling cast seemed to enjoy themselves. After another performance tomorrow night they head for a Saturday show at the Naval Academy. Then they're off to Europe for a tour of Germany.
